Everyone's looking forward to Rio 2016. But how will Rio soon be looking back at it? At EY we believe that the Olympic Games should have a lasting impact beyond the three weeks of sporting activity. This also fits in with our international motto: Building a better working world.

That's why 24 EY colleagues from North and South America, Belgium and the Netherlands will be spending three months working for Brazilian NGOs under the Olympic Legacy Volunteer Program (OLVP). They'll work as a global team on projects bringing about a permanent improvement to the living conditions of people in Brazil. For three months - from April to July 2016 - they'll work together virtually on a range of projects. They'll also go to Brazil to advise several NGOs on the spot. And since they'll already be there, they'll take the opportunity to attend the Olympics for three days.

In the international team that will be carrying out this project, there's room for two talented students from Belgium and the Netherlands. Students with an affinity for sport and volunteering who want to make a contribution. This is a unique opportunity to get to know EY from the inside, gain a wealth of experience, do something good for the community and go on a unique journey.

Our 'Rio Day' takes place on 23 March. On that day we'll welcome you to our head office in Diegem to take part in a varied programme. Those who are selected will join our team and win a ticket to Rio.

Do you have an economic background? A very good knowledge (written & oral) of English? And are you available to go to Rio from August 15 - August 22?

Then hesitate no longer and subscribe for our Rio Day via ey.com/be/rio
